

I am writing to express my opinions that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen the Indiana Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved our time at home. No longer do I run to answer calls of products and services that I am not interested in, nor signed up to receive any information about. No longer do I begin to be polite in refusing the product, yet to be verbally badgered and made to feel that I should apologize for not wanting their products when they have intruded into my home. (I pay my phone bill- it is my right not to receive unwanted calls.) Indiana's law has been extremely effective in reducing and practically eliminating my unwanted calls.

I actually answer my phone instead of screening my calls via voice mail and caller ID, neither of which are acceptable choices for parents who receive calls from schools, teachers and other child related concerns. Not to mention the interruption of my business related calls. Thanks to Indiana, our home stress has been reduced! Please don't change it!!!
